The Attorney General’s Office advises that neither the “Freedom of Information Act” nor the “Sunshine Act” requires the health department to reveal the name of a person(s) filing a complaint.

The person desiring such information would need to initiate legal action and the court could subpoena all records related thereto including the name(s) of complainants.

References

History

Attachments